

March 2010

Greetings! Peace and Joy!

May God's blessing be upon you and your ministry now and throughout the New Year.

This is our FIFTH NCPD Council on Mental Illness Network Newsletter.

We are looking for people to help with the newsletter!! If you would like to help with editing, writing or finding stories to share, please contact me at 773-525-0453.

We are also looking for you to tell us about your ministry; what you are doing, what are your hopes, and what are your struggles. One of our goals is to network ideas and ministries so that we can all share in the day to day life of people trying to make a difference by being Christ to one another.

Please send all emails to me, Deacon Tom Lambert, at olmcinfo2@aol.com and put NCPD Council on MI Network in the subject line. You can also call me at 773-525-0453 if you have any questions or ideas.

NAMI Faithnet had the following from Yolanda Ortega, also a member of our network, who ministers in the San Antonio Faith-based Mental Health Initiative.

Multicultural Outreach through Training Ministries

By Yolanda H. Ortega, faith-based mental health initiative coordinator

As faith communities expand their efforts to embrace the needs of families and individuals with mental illness, lives and communities will improve. The cry for good services will grow louder. Families and individuals everywhere will feel welcome, supported and loved. They will have better access to relief in crises.

I lead the Faith-based Mental Health Initiative, an independent program, which NAMI San Antonio helped create and still supports. Since 2006, the Initiative has helped congregations start mental health ministries. We mentor faith leaders and assist them with starting ministries at their own places of worship.

From a multicultural standpoint, we have worked primarily with Hispanics and African Americans. Our efforts have engaged Baptist, Catholic, Episcopal, Lutheran, Methodist, Evangelical, Non-Denominational and Presbyterian faith communities.

By the numbers

- Of 18 mental health ministry efforts started or in the works, lay leaders include nine Hispanics and three African Americans.
- Four support groups are predominantly multicultural and three groups are bilingual.
- Among active clergy, one is African American and three are Hispanic.
- One pastor ministers to a diverse group of offenders on probation.

Sylvia Luna, my assistant and a licensed substance abuse counselor for the homeless, plans a multi-faith conference of mostly Hispanic and African American people from small Evangelical churches. She recently trained a small group of African American pastors in Selma, Alabama on self-awareness of stigma toward those with mental illness. The pastors in turn plan to offer workshops themselves and have already done so in Selma and Montgomery.

Basic Strategies

- We offer a non-faith specific training for clergy and laity, typically lasting four to six hours for large groups, or two to three hours for staff of a faith community.
- We assist people who want to create more caring congregations. For two years, we recruited ministry leaders on a church-by-church basis; now people contact us.
- We use Pathways to Understanding: A Manual on Ministry and Mental Illness, which is sold online at www.pathways2promise.org, for talks by clergy on "meshing faith and mental health."
- We first work to get the leader of each congregation to "buy into" a ministry. Buy-in includes providing space for meetings and access to promotion opportunities available to other ministries.

Each ministry is "of and by the church." Infusing spirituality is up to individual ministry leaders and clergy. NAMI San Antonio provides the Pathways to Understanding manual for clergy and laity, access to NAMI classes and office resources and facilities for non-faith specific trainings.

The Initiative mentors each leader in how to: develop a ministry, facilitate a support group and help families and consumers plug into mental health treatment and community services.

RESOURCES

Ann Sherzer, Director - Ministry with Persons with Disabilities, Diocese of Kalamazoo sends us the following resource with some great tips and advice:

If you have never heard of the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA) I highly recommend you take a look. At "samhsa.gov" you can find good resources about mental illness that can either be downloaded or ordered for free. Topics include types of mental illnesses, how to access help, suicide, youth and young adult concerns, issues of mental health and aging and just about anything you can think of.

I like samhsa.gov because

- I can download fact sheets and other resources as I need them and don't have to remember where I left the master copy
- They will send me supplies of well written and well laid out brochures on any number of topics that I can keep at the office and bring to events
- SAMHSA is the source for the excellent materials from the What a Difference A Friend Makes campaign, educating youth and young adults on how to be supportive of their peers with mental illness.
- Many of the resources are available in Spanish as well as English.

A note of caution: protect your credibility and always read any literature you give out.

P.S. I "second" Ann's recommendation! Excellent resource.
